

Fiberglass Cable Tray Specifications and Companies

AI Overview

Fiberglass cable trays are lightweight, corrosion-resistant, non-conductive systems designed for harsh industrial and offshore environments, with customizable sizes, resin types, and compliance with ASTM and ABS standards.

Material and Resin Systems Fiberglass cable trays are typically made from pultruded Fiber Reinforced Polymer (FRP), offering high strength-to-weight ratios, corrosion resistance, and non-conductive properties. Common resin systems include polyester and vinylester, with custom colors available. A surface veil is applied during pultrusion to enhance corrosion resistance and provide UV protection. These trays are self-extinguishing and meet ASTM E-84 Class 1 flame rating and ASTM D-635 requirements for fire safety (MP Husky).

Mechanical Properties Fiberglass trays are lighter than steel, often weighing one-third of equivalent steel trays, yet they maintain superior strength. They are non-magnetic, reduce shock hazards, and are transparent to radio waves, radar, and microwaves. Mechanical properties are verified through bending modulus tests and are designed to retain performance under elevated temperatures and corrosive environments.

Customization and Dimensions Manufacturers like Shandong Hongfeng Power Technology and Creative Composites Group offer custom widths, heights, thicknesses, and non-standard dimensions to meet project-specific requirements. Load tables and span references are provided to ensure proper support for cable loads. Custom finishes, branded packaging, and coordinated supply of trays, fittings, and accessories are also supported.

Industry Standards and Certifications Fiberglass cable trays are designed for marine, offshore, chemical, and industrial applications. Eaton's B-Line series, for example, is ABS-approved for marine vessels and supports stainless steel banding for compliance with coast guard requirements.
