

How much does a primary distribution box cost in East Africa

AI Overview

Primary distribution boxes in East Africa typically range from USD 50 to USD 300, depending on size, material, and features.

Price Range and Factors

In East Africa, particularly in Kenya, primary distribution boxes (also called distribution boards or DB boxes) vary in price based on the number of ways (circuits), material, and IP rating.

For example: Small residential boards (4–6 ways, ABS or PVC material) can cost around USD 50–100. Medium boards (10–12 ways, TPN or IP-rated enclosures) are priced between USD 100–200. Large or industrial boards (16–34 ways, robust ABS or steel enclosures, weather-resistant IP67) can cost USD 200–300 or more.

Additional factors influencing cost include:

- Pre-populated vs. empty boards: Pre-populated boards with circuit breakers are more expensive than empty enclosures.
- Material quality: ABS, PVC, or steel enclosures affect durability and price.
- IP rating: Weatherproof or dustproof boards (e.g., IP65–IP67) are higher in cost.
- Brand and supplier: International brands like Schneider Electric may be pricier than local manufacturers.

Where to Buy

Tronic Kenya offers a variety of TPN and SPN distribution boards suitable for residential and commercial use. Local electrical wholesalers and online marketplaces in East Africa provide options for both small and large-scale installations.

Summary

For budgeting purposes, a typical primary distribution box in East Africa costs between USD 50 and USD 300, with higher-end models designed for industrial or outdoor use reaching the upper end of this range. Choosing the right board depends on the number of circuits, environmental protection, and whether it comes pre-populated with breakers.
