AI Overview

Telecom infrastructure in Ethiopia, including towers, is primarily controlled by the state-owned Ethio Telecom. Ethiopia's telecommunications sector has historically been dominated by Ethio Telecom, a government-owned enterprise that serves as the main provider of internet, telephone, and digital services in the country . Ethio Telecom, formerly known as the Ethiopian Telecommunications Corporation (ETC), is part of Ethiopia's "Big-5" state-owned corporations and generates significant revenue for the government . While the Ethiopian government has begun liberalizing the telecom market, including licensing private operators like Safaricom Ethiopia, telecom towers and related infrastructure remain largely under state control . The government has considered allowing private investors to build telecom towers to meet rising demand, but as of early 2023, Ethio Telecom continues to own and operate the majority of the country's telecom towers . This means that any entity referred to as "Ethiopian Tower Communications" would likely be part of, or closely associated with, the state-owned Ethio Telecom infrastructure network. Context on Market Liberalization In 2021, Ethiopia ended its telecom monopoly by licensing Saf...
