

Oman s new optical cable traction machine

AI Overview

Oman's new optical cable traction machine is designed to efficiently pull and lay fiber optic and power cables, improving construction speed and reducing labor requirements.

Overview and Purpose The optical cable traction machine is a mechanical device used to pull, lift, or tension cables across various environments, including tunnels, ducts, overhead lines, and directly buried installations . In Oman, such machines are particularly relevant for fiber optic network expansion and large-scale electrical cable projects managed by companies like Oman Cables Industry and distributors such as Modern Peace Company . These machines are essential for long-distance cable transmission, ensuring controlled tension and preventing cable damage during installation.

Technical Features

- Cable Compatibility: Suitable for 4-288 core optical cables, steel stranded wires, and large-section power cables .
- Power Source: Typically powered by an electric motor, with the main shaft gear chain driving the transmission device to achieve linear motion .
- Construction: Composed of an engine, gearbox, and transmission device with jaws that open and close to retract or release cables efficiently .
- Support Mechanism: Equipped with support rods to handle reaction forces during operation, maintaining stability and alignment .
- Operational Advantages: Reduces labor by replacing 2-5 manual workers, allows overhead and buried cable installation, and prevents cable damage .

Applications in Oman Oman's telecommunications and electrical infrastructure projects benefit from these machines in several ways:

- Fiber Optic Deployment: Facilitates the installation of high-capacity fiber optic cables for telecom networks, including structured cabling and long-distance transmission .
- Power Cable Installation: Supports medium and low voltage power cable laying for industrial and urban projects managed by Oman Cab...
